
Eric Bacon Named President of Telemedicine.com

Telemedicine.com proudly announces Eric Bacon as its new President, bringing over two decades of transformative experience. Formerly President at AMD Global Telemedicine Inc., Eric's journey within the company spans 22 years, showcasing an unwavering commitment to advancing healthcare accessibility.

His ascent from corporate controller to VP of operations and finance underscores his dedication to catalysing change and enhancing care provision, particularly for underserved communities worldwide. Eric's profound passion for leveraging innovative technology in healthcare has driven the creation of medical devices and telemedicine solutions utilised across 50+ countries, facilitating millions of consultations.

Under Eric's guidance, AMD transitioned from medical device provision to a pioneering software development and technology enterprise. His expertise spans financial reporting, international manufacturing, regulatory affairs, and strategic leadership, all contributing to AMD's evolution.

Before his presidency, Eric served as VP of Finance and Operations at AMD, following roles at Intersoft Technologies and KPMG in Boston. He holds a seat on the board of the International Society for Telemedicine and eHealth and actively engages with organisations like the American Telemedicine Association.

Eric's commitment to advancing healthcare technology is evident through his participation in healthcare advisory groups and presentations at global telemedicine and healthcare IT forums. He graduated from Nichols College with a bachelor's degree.
